

The Class Action Clinic at Windsor Law is the first clinic in the world to focus on the needs of class members. Our ultimate objective is to provide substantive access to justice to class members and in doing so, better fulfill the access to justice promise of the class action regime.

The Clinic provides legal information and legal assistance in a variety of contexts, from information about existing class actions to assistance filing settlement claims and objections to proposed settlements. The Clinic also has a mandate to provide public legal education and engage in court interventions on matters of general importance to class members. More information about the Clinic's work is available on our website: www.classactionclinic.com.

Students will be expected to:

- Maintain weekly office hours of 3-4 hours;
- Communicate with class members to determine their needs;
- Conduct legal research;
- Draft legal documents;
- Investigate class actions;
- Prepare public legal education materials;
- Attend weekly seminar;
- Read assigned material and engage in discussion at the weekly seminar;
- Write one blog of 800-1200 words;
- Assist in the development and publicity of the Clinic; and
- Other work as needed.

Students will work under the direct supervision of the Staff Lawyer, Andrew Eckart, and obtain academic guidance from Professor Smyth.
